

MATTSON LAD MET DEATH BY BEING SEVERELY BEATEN

Believe Kidnapper's Victim Was First Stabbed In the Back

AUTOPSY PERFORMED

Evidence Shows Boy Fought Courageous Battle Against His Tormentor

By International News Service

TACOMA, Wash., Jan. 13—Charles Mattson was stabbed in the back by a fiendish kidnaper before being bludgeoned to death with a length of pipe or a hammer, it was learned today by International News Service, after an autopsy was performed on the ten-year-old victim's body.

Death did not result from the deep dagger wound which penetrated the boy's body several inches, but failed to strike any vital organs, the autopsy showed.

Charles may have been held captive in the open woods or in a shack, the floor of which was dirt—a conclusion arrived at because of the clay beneath the victim's fingernails.

The mute evidence gleaned from the autopsy, indicated that the boy fought a courageous but losing struggle to escape his tormentor, apparently was flung to the ground—on the uncovered floor of a shack—and while putting his fists in the dirt to make another attempt to beat off his fiendish captor, was stabbed in the back with a file or dagger several inches in length.

Then the death blow was delivered—a cruel blow in the back of the child's head with a pipe or a hammer. The nature of the wound indicated the death instrument was narrow and oval in shape.

This blow ended the inhuman treatment of the boy, whose tormentor, G-men are convinced beyond doubt, as a result of the autopsy, is a moron.

EVERETT, Wash., Jan. 13—(INS)—The first definite "break" in the intensive hunt for the kidnaper-slayer of Charles Mattson was revealed here today.

It was learned by International News Service that a car is impounded in Everett which is believed beyond a doubt to be the machine used by the black-bearded "Tim" who snatched the boy, 10-year-old son of Dr. William W. Mattson, prominent Tacoma surgeon, from his home December 27 and tossed his battered body into the CHALFONT, Jan. 13—Declaring that the egg market is in a very critical condition, William M. Lynch, of "Forest Poultry Farm," one of the largest poultry farms in Bucks county, declares that a price adjustment will have to take place or the United States government will start to buy up all eggs for storage purposes and use them for relief.

"What is the United States government going to do to help the poultry farmers?" Lynch asked. "At the present time egg quotations are 5½ cents per dozen below the 1936 average and at the same time all types of feed have increased in price 30 percent."

MISTRIAL IS DECLARED IN THE HUCKVALE CASE

Jury Fails to Agree; Widow of Bristol Man, Fatally Hurt, Seeks Damages

SOME OTHER CASES

DOYLESTOWN, Jan. 13—In the case of Amelia Huckvale, of Bristol, against Louis Frantz, of Philadelphia, on trial this week in Bucks County civil and equity court, a juror was ordered withdrawn and a mistrial declared yesterday afternoon. This resulted when the jury failed to agree after being out from two to 5:35 p. m.

The case was heard before Judge Hiram H. Keller, who directed that a mistrial be declared.

Sixteen members and two visitors attended the Woman's Christian Temperance Union meeting last evening at the home of the Misses Rogers, 206 Jefferson avenue. Mrs. Harry Headley presided.

The meeting opened with the Crusade hymn "Give to the Winds thy Fears," and responsive reading of the Crusade Psalm 124 of which were used by the Crusaders of 1873 before setting forth to pray in the saloons.

Mrs. A. B. Sands led the devotional service. After reports of the secretary, Mrs. J. R. Hendricks, and treasurer, Miss Jane Rogers, Mrs. William P. Betz, director of relief work, reported the distribution at Christmas time of five boxes of food supplies.

Miss Gertrude Pope conducted a quiz on the state report. Mrs. Headley read from the state liquor laws, which she had obtained from Harrisburg, extracts showing that selling to minors and other restrictions are still enforced. Miss Laura Ellis read from the "Union Signal Weekly" a letter of Dr. Izora Scott, who is in charge of the W. C. T. U. legislative bureau at Washington, D. C., outlining bills which will be introduced in the 75th Congress now in session, notably those of Senator Capper for restriction of liquor advertising; Senator Copeland, a new food and drug bill proposing drastic changes in the federal health service; plans against motion pictures block-bolting; a neutrality bill, etc.

Vocal solos by Miss Laura Ellis, and songs by the group interspersed the program. Refreshments were served by the hostess.

Hundreds Attend Sale At Warburton Place

DOYLESTOWN, Jan. 13—It looked like a country fair yesterday at the public auction of modern farm machinery and registered Jersey cattle belonging to the estate of Barclay H. Warburton, Jr., grandson of the late John Wanamaker, Philadelphia merchant, at "Saracen Farms," Doylestown township.

More than 800 people attended the auction and cars jammed highways for several miles leading to the Warburton farm.

Hundreds of articles of farm machinery that the wealthy socialite had purchased and placed on his farm with the intention of developing the place into Bucks county's real show farm, were sold under the hammer to the highest bidder. Bargains were conspicuous by their absence and in most cases, good prices were brought.

Warburton died as a result of a gunning accident on his farm last Thanksgiving Day when his gun was accidentally discharged as he stepped over a small wire fence. The former aviator and world-traveler purchased "Saracen Farm" less than two years ago and had developed it along experimental lines.

Jersey heifers brought as high as $175, $155, $140 and Jersey calves brought $52 and $40 apiece. A tractor sold for $555 while an ensilage cutter sold for $235. Wood-working machinery brought nearly its retail value. The real estate was not sold.

Mrs. Warburton, the widow, is residing in New York City.

Tavern Signs Now Much Prized

By Maurice Merryfield

International Illustrated News Writer

NEW YORK, Jan. 13—Newest prize to be sought by the collector is the historic old tavern sign.

Because of their present scarcity, their picturesqueness, and the attractive designs which many of them carry, these museum pieces are now much in demand.

When an exhibit of signs which once hung in front of England's inns and taverns was recently displayed in London, it aroused an enthusiastic response from thousands who attended the show. Although the "hunting" is not as good in United States, there were scores of colonial inns and southern hostleries whose signs are now part of some collector's treasures.

Not long ago the Metropolitan museum staged an exhibit gathered from various sources which was quite impressive in size and variety. One of the interesting features of the show was the manner in which the various exhibits reflected the styles which were popular in old England.

To the layman, these signs may not have the significance which they carry for the veteran collector. In the old days, however, those who traveled the postroads of England or the colonies could tell much about the type of inn by the design of the sign which hung in front.

In the days when politics was a most serious and personal business, ye inn keeper often advertised his political allegiance with a sign which reflected credit on the party of his choice. His inn thus became the gathering place for those similarly-minded while down the road would assemble the stalwarts of another party under the friendly roof of a second tavern keeper who differed from the host of the neighboring hostelry.

There were certain names which were much in favor among those who catered to the public thirst and hunger. "The Blue Boar," "The White Horse," "The Red Lion," "The Bell," "The Royal Arms" and "The Boar's Head" were among the names which appeared most frequently on the emblazoned heralds before the old inns.

Many of these signs were the work of first-rate artists who lavished their talents on the insignia and received excellent pay for their work. The rivalry among Mein Hosts to flaunt the most attractive sign resulted in a competition which brought forth some very respectable works of art.

Hogarth, Potter, Constable and Corregio in Europe, Gilbert Stuart and Carter in United States were among the well-known painters who were not above devoting their talents to decorating a tavern sign.

Furthermore, this practice of advertising inns and country hotels by attractive signs is apparently returning to favor, since many of the modern establishments are heralding their attractions in a style reminiscent of ye olden days.

BROOK STREET PROPERTY OWNER DEFIES PHILADELPHIA ELECTRIC COMPANY TO PLACE POLE IN SIDEWALK ALONG HIS PROPERTY

Workmen of the Philadelphia Electric Company retreated today when they met with opposition to the placing of a pole on the sidewalk at the intersection of Cherry street and an alleyway, between Brook street and Lincoln avenue.

Apparently not sure of their ground the workmen gave up the job of placing the pole, when the owner of the property abutting on the sidewalk objected. The property owner, Dominick DeLissio, owns the property at Brook and Cherry streets. The property extends along Cherry street to an alleyway and it was the intention of the Philadelphia Electric Company to place the pole along the sidewalk on the corner of Cherry street and the alleyway.

Yesterday when workmen began to dig the hole DeLissio objected and brought into play an American flag. Then it is said that the workmen changed the location and endeavored to place the pole further along in the pavement. To this DeLissio objected. He argues that there is already one pole on the Brook and Cherry street corner of his property, and he does not want another one along his property.

The sidewalk at the disputed spot is about five feet wide and is of concrete. If a pole was placed at the designated spot there would only be about 3½ feet clearance between the pole and a concrete block wall, which has been erected in lieu of a fence.

DeLissio placed some old window

MACHINE-MADE WAR

Amid all the prophecies of unspeakable horrors in that "next war" which always seems just around the corner, there comes one cheering note. It comes most appropriately at this season from Major John K. Christmas, United States army ordnance expert, an authority on the use of tanks.

Major Christmas predicts that future wars will be conducted with an economy of lives and money by having fighting machines "do most of the dirty work." The fighting machine which Major Christmas has immediately in mind, of course, is the tank. The major advances three principal arguments in favor of the tank: That the percentage of personnel killed in World War engagements was 13.2, about one-half the percentage of infantry; that a light tank in large quantity production could be produced for about what it costs to train, equip and maintain one combat soldier; that one tank "has the fighting power of several, if not many, soldiers."

The cost of wars' aftermath can be scaled down, Major Christmas adds, by transferring casualties from men to machines. When a soldier becomes a casualty, he points out, insurance, hospitalization and pensions become continuing costs. When a tank becomes a casualty it is scrapped and that's an end to it.

The ordnance expert's arguments in favor of machine-made war seem valid insofar as the tank is concerned. If the next war could be conducted entirely by motorized land vehicles, it might not be so frightful an affair as the last war. But we must remember that there are war machines other than tanks which "do the dirty work" without economy of lives—even of non-combatant lives. Conspicuous examples are the bombing airplane and the submarine.

STAMPS FOR COLLECTORS

Philatelists the country over are agog over the issue of two new two-cent stamps by the federal government. On January 15 the army and navy stamps of this denomination will go on sale in Washington and throughout the country as soon as distribution can be effected. There is now a one-cent army-navy series.

In each lower corner are the denomination numerals "II" while along the lower border of the stamp are the words "two cents." Laurel branches extend downward from the base of the ovals. At the top and sides of the stamp is a narrow panel in the center of which at the top is the inscription "United States Postage" and on either side of the word postage is a small white five-pointed star.

Behind the Scenes in HOLLYWOOD

By HARRISON CARROLL
Copyright, 1937,
King Features Syndicate, Inc.

HOLLYWOOD—Honors now rest about even in the Carole Lombard-Clark Gable practical joke contest. But Carole—shortly will prove herself the arch-riber of the two by carrying the fight to the screen itself. With the aid of Director Mitchell Leisen, she is pulling a gag at Clark's expense in her new picture, "Swing High, Swing Low".

Carole Lombard

There is a scene in the script where Fred MacMurray and Dorothy Lamour go to a race track and put all their money on a certain horse.

The dialogue has been switched so that you'll hear them yell: "Come on 'Beverly Hills'! For once in your life, win!"

Beverly Hills is the name of Gable's race horse. He has been kidded plenty about the fact that it never wins. The horse in the picture won't either.

Very funny about Jack Dunne, who used to be Sonja Henie's skating partner and who, one of these days, will make a picture called "St. Moritz" for Universal. Dunne finished up an exhibition tour in the east and grabbed a plane in Chicago to return to Hollywood.

After running into bad weather all the way, he finally arrived here on a cattle train.

"I got sick of the snow and cold weather back east," said Dunne, who makes his living skating on ice.

It's an open season on prophets, but watch the romance between Parkyakarkas and Thelma Leeds. She's the former New York night club and radio star, who is now under contract to R-K-O and working in the picture, "Robber Barons". Both she and Parkyakarkas deny an engagement at the moment, but the gossips are wagging they are serious.

You Asked Me and I'm Telling You! Myrtle Class, Venice: John Howard used to devote most of this time to Andrea Leeds, but recently he has been paying a lot of attention to Margaret Tallichet.

M. G. M.'s casting director, Billy Grady, is still weak from the shock of a surprise New Year's Eve party at his house, to which Merrill Pye and Benny Gray, unbeknownst to their victim, issued 100 engraved invitations. As a diabolical after-thought, they smuggled in an imitation of Grady's prized alabaster lamp and smashed it during the height of the festivities.

Here and there in Hollywood... Those in the know are in hysterics over the identity of one of the persons who aroused John Barrymore's ire in that Trocadero row with Elaine Barrie.

... Mrs. Larry Crabbe is home from the hospital after weeks following that auto crash... Hospital bound, however, is Director Victor Fleming. They'll finish "Captains Courageous" when he gets out. ... Ellen Melohn, of the Cosmopolitan office here, is a bride. Charles Carnozzi is the lucky man. ... It sounds impossible but Fernand Gravet picked a winner on 16 consecutive bets at Santa Anita. ... Eleanor Powell and Buddy Ebsen are already rehearsing for "Broadway Melody of 1937", though the picture hasn't any starting date. ... Mrs. Chester Morris is in bed with a relapse of the flu.

"LUXURY MODEL" by MAY CHRISTIE

SYNOPSIS

Enroute to her home in Los Angeles from college, beautiful Elizabeth Harmon meets Gerald Bruton, a stock broker. Her stepfather, Colonel James McCarthy, disapproves of Gerald, but after a whirlwind courtship, the young couple elope to Arizona and are married. That same day, in the lobby of a hotel at San Diego, a woman approaches Gerald and exclaims, "Why, Gerald, I'd no idea you were in California. Have you brought your wife along? Or is Mrs. Bruton in Chicago?" Elizabeth is stunned but Gerald assures her he is divorced, adding that he refrained from telling her for fear of losing her love. Gerald leaves Elizabeth while she takes a nap. In the meantime, detectives arrive with a warrant for his arrest on a charge of defrauding investors.

CHAPTER VII

In that terrible moment of realization, the despised warning of her stepfather came back to her clearly, and his ultimatum that she had defied. "There's to be no going out with this Gerald Bruton. There's never been a scandal in our family... I owe it to your dead mother to see there never will be one!"

Insane susceptibility and mad vanity and recklessness had carried her away. She was married to a jail-bird! He had planned to get across the border into Mexico, beyond the grip of the law, taking her with him, dragging her to his own level!

They would arrest him—and her, too, for complicity. Her life was finished. Suddenly her heart stood still, then seemed to turn right over in her chest. For she had heard the quick step of Gerald in the passage outside. She had an instinct to scream, to warn him of the presence of these men and of his danger, but not a sound escaped her dry throat.

He flung the door open. For one second he stood in the aperture, staring at the four of them.

Then he stepped back, slamming the door and locking it from the outside. She could hear his footsteps flying down the corridor.

"McGraw, use your pass-key! Jones, telephone the desk!"

In a flash they were out in the passage, running like hounds after the quarry. Doors were opened and heads popped out. Elizabeth, shaken to the core of her being, felt she could have died of the shame of it. They brought him back in handcuffs to her. She felt sick. She thought she would faint.

"Gerald," she whispered, "say it isn't true! Please say it isn't true!" Her wet eyes beseeched him.

His lips twisted in the same wry, hard smile she remembered on the train, when she had exclaimed: "How terrible to be shut away from the world!" and he had agreed with her.

"I guess we're out of luck, thanks to your overwhelming wish for respect! But we have to yield to the ladies, don't we?" he said sarcastically. He bowed to Elizabeth. "Looks as if our honeymoon will have to be postponed."

She was staring at a stranger! It seemed as though she were sleepwalking. This thing couldn't have happened!

The brusque voice of the senior detective crashed into the appalling silence. "It'll be postponed for a matter of ten to fifteen years, buddy. Sorry, sister, but you'll have to come along too."

Colonel James McCarthy, late of the United States Cavalry, awoke on the morning of the day following Elizabeth's elopement in a very bad temper.

That Yuma, Arizona, was celebrated principally for its runaway marriages he knew.

But he had no definite proof that Elizabeth was married. Nor, in his anger with her, had he tried to find out anything further about her doings. She was ungrateful and disobedient and he was through with her, he told himself.

But he couldn't shut out worry. Worry had nagged him all day yesterday. He had slept badly for two nights in succession. He knew he would go right on sleeping badly, and feeling liveryish in the morning, until he had further definite news of his step-daughter.

As for old Martha, she walked about the house as though there had been a funeral, the old fool!

"Where's the morning paper? Don't stand there staring!" he barked at her from the breakfast table. He was annoyed that his hands shook as he opened it, for he would have been the last person to admit that he was seeking news of Elizabeth in its pages.

Only old Martha knew.

She had made kedgeree for him this morning—a peppery concoction of fish and rice and hard-boiled egg that is a favorite in the Orient. He was attacking it half-heartedly.

Elizabeth was headstrong. Doubtless she was angry that he had spoken to her high-handedly. He understood that this going off with a party of friends was not uncommon nowadays among rebellious

Elizabeth had spent the night with the police matron, sharing her room. The police captain had suggested this as being better than a cell. Her beauty and refinement and distress had touched him.

She had slept fitfully, with terrifying dreams. They were no more terrifying than reality. The man whose name she bore had a police record! She was married in name only! Her own name hopelessly besmirched!

And what of Gerald's attitude? Her pity had got the better of her horror, until she realized that in his cool brazenness, he had no use for her pity—or for her either. He had told her she had been a selfish little fool to insist on stopping off in San Diego, that it was all her fault that this thing had happened. Neither remorse, nor pity for her

They brought him back in handcuffs to her. She thought she would faint.

"modern" girls, though it was deplorable.

She would probably be home today, with some kind of an explanation. Not that any explanation would be adequate, nor would he condone what she had done.

The fork with which he had been manipulating the kedgeree slipped from his fingers to his plate as he stared at the headlines above a news-item on page one. The blood drained from his cheeks, leaving only red blotches. His breath came gustily. He seemed on the verge of a stroke. The horrifying headlines screamed:

ELOPING COUPLE JAILED; HONEYMOON INTERRUPTED

Self-Styled Broker Arrested For Selling Bogus Stock

Elizabeth Harmon, His Bride and Member of Distinguished California Family, Held As Accomplice

The terrible item came from San Diego. She had married her crook! Here was his record! His appalling record! The detectives had arrested them. The district attorney had complimented the detectives on their smart work. Good heavens, "smart work!" With his stepdaughter's reputation ruined, and she herself in prison!

The Colonel tried to get to the telephone, but the loud drumming in his ears confused him. He waited. Calmer now! Calm! He must get all his forces together.

Fifteen minutes later he was out on the open road, at the wheel of his car, headed for San Diego, like a good soldier.

PREPARE EXHIBITS NOW FOR THE PENNA. STATE FARM SHOW

By Rhandena A. Armstrong (Home Economics Representative)
Are you planning to exhibit something at State Show? Now is the time to be getting that exhibit ready. A premium book will tell what articles to bring.

Owing to limited space, home furnishing articles for open classes include only braided and hooked rug rugs made in 1936. Since entries close at 6 o'clock Saturday night, January 16, articles should be sent to reach Harrisburg for the morning delivery. There is no mail delivery on Saturday afternoon. Provision also must be made for the return of exhibits after the close of the show.

Standards for judging rugs are high. The three main points a judge considers are the worth of the article, its beauty, and its construction.

"Is the article useful enough to warrant the time and energy spent in making it, and are the materials used suitable for the purpose of the article?" are questions which the judge asks herself as she carefully appraises each rug. Wools and cottons are more durable for the braided or hooked rug while silk and rayon materials are suitable for the hooked and braided chair seats or table mats.

In color and design, simplicity ranks high. Lines conforming to the shape of the rug, good spacing, and conventional design rather than naturalistic are preferred. Soft, harmonious colors are more pleasing and restful than intense, bright, or too delicate colors for floor rugs.

Stitches should be close, permanent, and inconspicuous in the braided article so that it may be used on either side and will lie flat. Hooked articles should have even, close loops on the right side and a smooth back with the edge of the burlap turned back and securely finished.

CROYDON

The young people spent a delightful evening at Croydon fire house, the main feature being dancing. Soft drinks and sandwiches were sold. The orchestra obliged with special music requests.

Mrs. Charles Plagaman, Pleasantville, is spending a few days with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Ruch.

Charles Winchester returned Monday evening after a stay at his parents' home in Philadelphia.

The Croydon school children are progressing rapidly in their calisthenics. The different colored caps make the work very spectacular. Mr. and Mrs. William Johnston enjoyed Monday in Philadelphia among relatives.

Remember the Croydon school card and bingo party Thursday night.

SUNDAY DINNER Suggestions

By ANN PAGE

THERE has been little change in meat prices during the last week. Forequarter cuts of lamb and beef are better values than hindquarter. If you are planning to have a steak, I suggest a chuck steak of beef or individual lamb steaks from the shoulder for an inexpensive meal. Chickens, fowl and turkeys average about one-fourth less than they did this time last year.

Egg production is high and consequently prices for fine fresh eggs are lower. If the weather permits, plenty of fresh fish will be available at moderate prices. Frozen fish, however, is reasonable.

There is great variety of fresh vegetables and fruits. Shipments of new potatoes and strawberries are increasing, and the prices are lower. Here are 3 menus using reasonable foods, planned to fit three pocket-books.

Low Cost Dinner
Shoulder Lamb Steaks
Buttered Beets Mashed Potatoes

PINTO BOOKED TO MEET OLSON IN TRENTON ARENA

TRENTON, Jan. 13.—Stanley Pinto, belligerent Nebraskan, will test the new found powers of Cliff Olson, stream-lined Swede, when the two clash in the feature match at Johnny Ipp's weekly mat party at the Arena tonight. It is a 90-minute time limit match, two falls out of three.

Olson leaped into national prominence several months ago when he met Yvon Robert, recognized in the New England states and Canada as the heavyweight champion, in a match at Washington, D. C. The match was ended when Robert suffered a fractured leg and was rushed to a hospital where he is still confined.

Cliff's newly perfected trick for first time that night proved to be the most effective weapon to be brought to wrestling ranks in a decade. Used for the first time on Robert, it brought the Swede a claim to the heavyweight title and victory in every bout since that night. Other wrestlers surrendered before their legs would be broken as was Robert's. Olson calls the hold a step-over inside leg hold and last week demonstrated its effectiveness by downing Mike Mazurki.

Olson will be fighting with annihilation tonight. Pinto was the second victim of Olson's dreaded new hold and has been clamoring for a return since the night Cliff forced him to surrender in Camden. Pinto studied the hold and believed that he has perfected a defense to nullify its effectiveness. Pinto is noted for his deadly fore-arm smashes and can absorb as much punishment as he hands out. The bald-pated Nebraskan won his only two starts here, downing Gabriel D'Annunzio in short order and surprising everybody by beating Abe Goldberg in less than five minutes.

Cliff is pretty cocky about his chances to best Pinto, but the record books say that no grappler has ever taken two straight wins from the Nebraskan.

Neither man can afford to lose this match and a worth-while scrap is bound to develop when these two wildcats clash.

One of the best bouts of the season is sure to be contested when Paul Boesch, popular hero of many an Arena mat combat, returns to the wars against rowdy John Katan, in the 30-minute time limit semi-windup. There is little to choose between them and it should be a nip-and-tuck battle.

Two other 30 minute time limit brawls, limited to one fall will bring together Joe Maynard, Chicago ruffian, opposed to George McLeod, hugo Texan and Ed Meske, handsome Ohioan, facing Jim Wright.

The first bout will start at 8.30 p. m.

Find Killer

New York, Jan. 13.—Less than thirty-six hours after the brutal bathtub slaying of beautiful Mrs. Mary Harriet Case, 25, in her Jackson Heights apartment, police announced today they had found the killer in the person of a negro porter who worked in the building.

The negro was identified as Major Green 33, formerly employed by the Jackson Heights Bachelor's Club. Police said three of his fingerprints were found on the floor of the bathroom. Arrested with Green and grilled were his brother Henry Green and William Henry Johnson, described as a nephew of Green's wife. Johnson, police said, sent to a laundry a blood-stained shirt belonging to Major Green, and that Henry Green tried to dispose of a suit of clothes, alleged to have been taken from the Case apartment.

Mrs. Case's husband today was in Lancaster, Pa., where his wife's body, clad in a blue evening gown, was taken for burial. The body was shipped in a special car via the Pennsylvania Railroad, accompanied by Case, Mrs. Case's father, W. J. Robinson, a Lancaster undertaker, and her mother. Her parents had rushed to New York as soon as they were informed of their daughter's murder.

Manera Has Easy Time Trimming Eddie Strong

Otto Manera had an easy time in trimming Eddie Strong to win his match of the Bristol Pool Tournament. Manera was on the long end of a 125-51 score, piling up a huge margin from the start. The game was played in St. Ann's club-house before a large crowd.

Score by racks:

Manera: 14 11 13 8 11 13 8 8 12 8 11 5 7 11—125

Strong: 0 3 16 3 16 6 26 3 9 7 0—51

High run of the match was made by Manera, who ran off 17; Strong's best run was 8. Strong was the victim of six scratches, while Manera was guilty four times. The game was refereed by Eugene Squillace, while the scorer was Bud Tunis.

Tomorrow night the feature game of the first round will be played, when Willie Manera and Jimmy Palerm meet.

snow where it was found near here Monday. The car was recovered yesterday on the streets of Everett and immediately spirited into hiding by officers who have swept into this storm-blocked section of Washington by scores since the surgeon's days of hopeful waiting crashed into tragedy with the finding of his son's body.

The machine, believed to be a black coach, bore license plates stolen from a car in a town near Everett. The "hot" auto disappeared Friday from the place where it was parked by its owner.

As the case now is reconstructed, the brutal kidnapper, who tried to get $25,000 ransom from Dr. Mattson after the boy was slain, purloined the suspected car for the one horrible purpose of disposing of the body.

He is believed to have driven around the countryside with his gruesome burden from his hideout where the murder took place, probably eight days before the boy was found, from Friday until Sunday, when he tossed his cruelly-beaten victim into the snow-sheathed brush.

As the new and most important development electrified the army of law enforcement agents on the case, the drive was continued on all other reports, suspects and clues.

The Northwest was engaged in its great manhunt with a determination to bring the fiend to justice, to capture him dead or alive, and there was a grim attitude from the citizenry that lent an air of probability to the talk of lynching freely heard in this vicinity and around Tacoma where Dr. and Mrs. Mattson are burying their son later today.

There were two other developments, besides the finding of the car here, which received close attention from the G-men and other officers. These were the discovery of a shack, perhaps the hideout of "Tim," near the spot where the body was flung and the holding of two men in Grand Forks, B. C., for questioning.

State patrolmen and federal agents had established a close guard around the shack, which is a thicket of woods, accessible only by a narrow, rutty road. They went over the structure inch by inch, following the report of two nearby farmers who said that two weeks ago, the night after Charles was whisked from home, a car was driven to the shack and remained all night.

No one was seen near the place again, the farmers said, until last Sunday night when a car was driven in there, remained a short time, and then disappeared. It was at about this time, investigators believe, that the nude and battered body was consigned to the snow.

State police removed a huge four-foot window from the shack and turned it over to G-men to be examined for fingerprints. A tin cup and mirror also were examined for fingerprints and a pair of boots were to be compared with footprints found near the body.

The two men arrested in Canada, it was reported here, were nabbed by Royal Canadian Mounted Police for illegal entry into the country and fined for carrying firearms without a permit. They were said to be carrying rifles, shotguns, pistols and a considerable amount of ammunition.

Harold Nathan, chief of the G-men on this case, would not comment at his Tacoma office on the Canadian angle, but it was believed Federal agents are en route to Grand Forks.

The desperado had a price on his head which may reach $20,000, and a horrified country that is demanding his apprehension.

The search was centered today around Everett and was being directed from a country grocery store. From this temporary headquarters state patrolmen and G-men were combing every foot of a wild and desolate terrain.

This grocery, by coincidence, is the spot which was set for the ransom payment in an attempted kidnapping several years ago of John von Herberg, son of a Seattle capitalist. The abduction was thwarted by federal and local authorities and the man who admitted the plot was arrested. He is now in California, authorities say. They checked him after the disappearance of Charles Mattson.

lights on the bicycle. He said that he was driving the truck at 20 miles an hour, when the plaintiff's husband appeared in front of the truck, on a bicycle. Mr. Huckvale was on his way to work. Rosenblatt said that he applied his brakes and swerved his truck to the left. The lights on the truck were all working and the driver could see 500 feet ahead.

Rosenblatt testified that the accident happened at the intersection of Cleveland street and Farragut avenue. Plaintiff witnesses called included the following: Joseph Mori, Deputy Coroner, Dr. James P. Lawler, Roscoe Phillips, Antoni Imbesi, John Sackville, Fred W. Randall, Raymond W. Wright, Amelia Huckvale.

Rosenblatt testified that Huckvale was only six feet away from the truck when he first noticed him.

Louis Frantz, the defendant, and owner of the truck, was riding with Rosenblatt when the accident happened on May 20, 1936. He said the truck had eight brakes and that all brakes worked perfectly. Frantz said that nothing could be seen without the aid of lights.

Boxing's Biggest Belter

By BURNLEY

The bigger they are the harder they fall! Applying the old Fitzsimmons maxim to fistiana's newest and largest mastodon, it would seem that Jack Torrance is due for a terrible bump when—and if—he hits the canvas.

Torrance, as you remember, is the frail fellow who tips the scales at a few tons in his stocking feet, and who still holds the world's shot-put record. This playful little fellow has taken to smacking much smaller guys about with leather mittens, and, what's more, demands that he get paid for this sort of sadistic brutality. Yes, Baby Jack is now a professional knuckle tosser, and to prove that he is in earnest, the erstwhile weight tosser has melted down from his normal 330 pounds to a feathery 260 ringside avoirdupois.

Torrance used to play football at L. S. U., and he was one of Biff Jones' best tackles. Biff used to say that if this overgrown boxer ever really got mad he could mop up the whole opposing team. None of the other boys could seem to hurt little Jack, however, so he never could work up a good rage.

This sunny disposition was thought to be the Titanic Torrance's big drawback as a ringman, but in his pro debut as a pug in New Orleans recently, Jack made a show of real ring ferocity as he mowed down his widely unknown foe with his "shot-put punch."

It is said that the wily Michael Jacobs will import the Dixie Dinosaur for exhibition in N. Y. rings, provided they can find a crate big enough to ship him East in.
